TED is supported by ads and partners Timon had been talking about briefly in here, but I thought to add to it because I recently saw it in person! I just got back from Vegas, with the main reason for going was to see P&T. We get there and are waiting to get in for the jazz to begin the show, and I overhear an usher saying a Fool Us performer would be opening the show! So excited. Turns out he didn't actually open the show, but rather closed it. I think it has to do more with timing of P&T and how they like to open the show. Anyways, P&T finish their (amazing!) show, and introduce Timon Krause. Timon comes out with a black blazer and a white shirt underneath. There is a stool to the side of the stage with a box sitting on it. He does some friendly banter (no awkward animals though), and picks a lady from the audience. The lady is built similarly to Alyson, thin figure etc. She gets on stage and Timon says they are going to play the game called, you have no choice. He starts with three association type questions. He says "peanut butter", and asks her for first word (sandwich.) I dont remember all 3 questions sorry. At the end he asks her what his favorite animal is. She answers Lion, and he opens his jacket to show "Lion" printed on it near the belt line. (hold for mild applause) Then onto the coin trick, the real money maker here. He explains it much the same way, and starts by putting it in her right hand. She goes behind her back, brings it out and he guesses correct. He same hand where Alyson then switched if I remember, This time the lady kept it in the same and he guesses correct. He does use the same exact language as he does with Alyson about reverse psychology whatever banter. Third time, gets it right. He then reaches into his inner right breast pocket of his jacket and pulls out the prediction. Its printed the same way as in Fool Us. The lady puts her hands out, and his predictions says rightrightright, and she opens her right hand to show the coin again and he was right on. A few things I notice. I think he handled the ladys hands less then he did with Alyson. He also had his sleeves rolled up to around his elbows for the majority of it, throwing out a RFID reader in a sleeve that was tossed around. I am blown away, no idea where to even start. My best guess would be he is picking smaller framed ladies so he can see a change in the hand size as it grasps the coin. But that is a full on guess, and brings the issue of needing 16 "predictions" hidden away. He then moved to a kind of card trick. He shows her a bunch of cards with different pictures on it. She picks one, and is then told to draw it in the air while he turns his back. When she is done, he turns around, now has a black shirt on underneath. He walks over to the box and pulls out a white tshirt with "lion" on one side, and a sailboat on the other. He gives the lady the shirt, thanks her, and bows to much applause. Overall it was a great performance. The middle trick is the most fantastic in my opinion. Any questions please ask! P&T did a few new tricks that were simple and very funny. I was hoping for Bullet Catch, but it must be rotated out. If you were ever wondering how the 'which hand is the coin trick,' is done by reading body speech. [ partition style= "9"] The 'Which hand is the coin in trick' can be done in two ways. Option one is reading body language, as explained by Chris Ramsay in video one. Option two is using mind control or hypnotic suggestion through conversational hypnosis, also called embedded commands. This is how I think Timon Krause fools Penn and Teller on Fool Us. I also provide links to courses which will teach you the power of mind control and conversational hypnosis below. [ splitter style= "2"] Which hand is the mint in whoremaster – Using body lyric The inaugural television is with Chris Ramsay. He begins by demonstrating the 'which hand is the coin in trick '. This which bridge player doodad is very bare, but effective! then he explains how he reads body linguistic process to work out which hand the mint is in. This is one manner to do this trick using colloquial hypnosis or mind operate. Which hand is the coin in trick - Using colloquial hypnosis or embedded commands In the second television with Timon Krause fooling Penn and Teller on the show 'Fool Us'. Timon Krause is known for winning the prize for 'Best European Mentalist.' Known besides for performing in Las Vegas, with Penn and Teller, which was his prize for fooling them on their show. It' south not certain how Timon Krause has done the flim-flam, but I think he 'south using conversational hypnosis and mind control or embedded commands. In other words he 'sulfur planting suggestions in the host's mind. He is literally telling her which hand to put the mint in to. The key to his 'antic' is when he says 'You have no choice.' The reason why she has no choice is because he is speaking directly with her subconscious. She doesn ' deoxythymidine monophosphate stand a chance. Bearing in mind he ' randomness fooled Penn and Teller, it will be unmanageable to truly know how he did the ' which hand is the coin in trick.' But this is my public opinion of how he did it. Read on below for another possible solution of how he did the magic trick. See what you think, after watching the television for yourself... The question I however ask; is he is influencing her using colloquial hypnosis or mind command? Or is he reading soundbox terminology like Chris Ramsay demonstrates in the beginning video recording? If Timon Krause is reading torso language, then the real solution to how he did his version of which hand is the coin in trick is that he must then have all the assorted outcomes on 16 distinguish sheets of newspaper. His only challenge is to then be able to remember which pocket he put each of the outcomes in. He needs to be able to locate the equal sheet with the right outcomes. But the reason why I don't think this is how he does it, is because he brings the piece of paper when the master of ceremonies still has her hands behind her spinal column. He then opens the wallpaper up before he has chance to read her. however, the only other choice that counters this argumentation, is Timon is a very beneficial judgment reader, or should I say body terminology reader. See the Tedx television below, but particularly the second one. It 's wholly potential that he has picked up on cues from her body language, which tell him which hand she has already put the mint into. But at this distributor point, with her hands silent behind her back, she could have changed her mind. Which is why I don ' triiodothyronine think this is how he did the trick. Whilst I accept and know that Timon Krause is good a read body terminology, I don ' metric ton think this is what he is doing. so this leaves me silent convinced he is using mind control or some form of conversational hypnosis. See below for ways you can learn these techniques. Timon Krause Tedx talk - where mentalism is by and large about psychology.
